Though most designers within the 4.0 version are focused on the advancements within the program, the biggest change is the removal of support for the 'X' Creative Suite, which includes Photoshop, Illustrator, Flash, Dreamweaver and ColdFusion. Adobe not only cited the lack of business stability within the enlarged Creative Suite family as the reason behind removing the support, but they also made the move to provide the cross-app and asset integration through the use of Creative SDK (Software Development Kits) with a number of web and mobile applications. Photoshop continues to grow with various update on each new version. This version brings several new features that include autocorrect, the Multi-monitor Editing Tool Bar, Noise Reduction options, and more. According to a report by Gizmodo, this is the last version of Photoshop as we know it from Adobe. Adobe will be releasing a new, redesigned Photoshop starting July 2019. Many editing tools like the Content Aware Fill are being used in movies and the TV industry in order to replace people manually filling in objects on a flat background. This tool can fill in dark areas of the image, whereas other automatic tools simply replaces content with shades similar to the original content. In the interest of quality, Content Aware Fill requires you to guess what content can be placed on certain areas that you are filling in. If you are missing information on the image, the tool will try to fill in the points it understands with the right kind of texture, colors, and objects. Few more changing for the color and lighting conditions.
