The slide-show features are extremely common and are on the list of features widely available on Macs. The idea here is to click a button to view a selection of images as a slideshow. The issue I had here was not with the slideshow itself, but rather with the fact that it simply played videos without showing an image preview. Adobe has made sure that their Content Aware (aka Content Aware Fill) technology is as good as it gets. I would point out one thing that may seem like a small thing, but may be really important: Adobe has optimized the algorithm to do its best for every image. Manually cropping an image can also be time-consuming. Don't forget that Adobe knows you're running out of time and has sent Special Forces to break into your house. If they don't find you, you won't get a refund. There is a lot of time spent on the time-saving features. Even the most basic ones are outdone by their equivalents found in other software, such as FotoMagico. But Photoshop still shines by its usability. A designer may not be an artist, but they definitely want to draw, paint, and doodle. Photoshop has features that are almost exactly like those found in Lightroom, but with more options. It can be confusing that there are two versions of Lightroom, but Lightroom music seemed like a good idea. The main thing that bothers me about Lightroom is the fact that it doesn't even have a basic dialog box to let you access the basic menu. This is a common error in other programs, such as the fact that every program costs $500. It is far better and user-friendly with enough menu options to not require a Professional to use, which is part of the reason why Photoshop is such an unapproachable beast.
